This is a guest post by Amie Jackson, Executive Director of The Hump Day Project, a non-profit organization in Baltimore that provides services to Baltimoreans with severe mental illness. The Hump Day Project is also launching their new summer respite camp. I am a therapist, and I work with at-risk youth in a small community mental health center. This year, I want to make a change, so I've joined with a handful of other therapists to run a program that is designed to help young adults ages 18-24 with severe mental illness. We call it "The Hump Day Project." I didn't begin it just because I know first-hand how difficult it can be to navigate the system to get the help that you need. The project's goal is to provide an alternative place to stay when people have to wait to see a mental health professional, in hopes that their lives can be 82157476af
